	2.	After the Naval Radio School was disbanded, all naval radio operators' training was given "on the job" ie, at the different naval communication units. This training was a considerably reduced program, compared to the four year, elaborate course of study formerly offered to naval radio operators at the Braila Naval Radio School. The three month training course was given while the sailors were on active duty, and consisted of transmission and reception procedure, and these only in Morse code.
